How people enrich their leisure is an individual matter, but an extremely wide choice should be available. Self-expression through art, however, is more than just personally satisfying to the artist; it contributes as well to the beholder and indeed to our culture.

The Office of Recreation and Park Resources, Department of Leisure Studies, in the College of Applied Life Studies is pleased to share in the promotion and conduct of this important event — the Illinois Town and Country Amateur Art Exhibition.

Kenneth S. Clarke, Dean
College of Applied Life Studies

The Office of Continuing Education and Public Service is pleased to continue its long association with the Town and Country Amateur Art Exhibition. We congratulate the many participating artists on their creative achievements and on the important contribution they make to education and cultural development in the state. Many amateurs have become more professional as a result of participation in this program. I look forward to joining those who visit the current state exhibit being held at Lincoln Square.

Dennis A. Dahl, Acting Director
Office of Continuing Education and Public Service

The Cooperative Extension Service is pleased to facilitate the appointment of the Town and Country Art Show Committee and to help sponsor the county, regional and state show. The continuous growth in the number of exhibitors and the quality of offerings is a tribute to the value of the event and the dedication of talented people throughout Illinois.

J. B. Claar, Director
Cooperative Extension Service

The College of Agriculture has been associated with the Town and Country Amateur Art Exhibition since its beginning as a rural art show presented during the College's Farm and Home Week in 1956. The thread of continuity has been provided through the dedication of faculty members and the many "volunteers" whose continuing interest in the show has assured its success and helped it grow to its current status. At the heart of the show, of course, are the artists, and we congratulate them on their accomplishments. We look forward to continued participation in the Town and Country Art Exhibition, cooperating with the College of Fine and Applied Arts, the College of Applied Life Studies, and the Office of Continuing Education and Public Service.

Orville G. Bentley, Dean
College of Agriculture

One of the great challenges for the College of Fine and Applied Arts is not only to offer the very best educational opportunities to students on this campus, but also to foster quality art in the larger Illinois community — locally, regionally and statewide.

It is with pride that the College assists in taking art beyond the academic setting and the cultural centers and helping to cultivate it among citizens of diverse backgrounds in every part of the state. Even more gratifying is the ever-improving quality of art produced by novice and veteran artists of Illinois.

The College looks forward to another fine series of exhibitions sponsored by the Town and Country Art Show Committee.

Jack H. McKenzie, Dean
College of Fine and Applied Arts

To Hadley Read.....

Hadley Read, practicing innovator and retired professor and head of the Office of Agricultural Communications at the University of Illinois, conceived the idea for an Illinois amateur art show and made possible the Town and Country State Amateur Art Exhibit in Champaign-Urbana.

The idea achieved expression in 1956 when Hadley encouraged the establishment of a rural arts show in conjunction with the 55th Farm and Home Week. Exhibitors during the early years of the show were rural residents, amateur artists living in the open country and in towns with populations of less than 10,000.

This rural population is very special to Hadley. Born and raised on a Hamilton County, Iowa, farm, Hadley received his early education in a one-room country school that featured a library of 16 books. His University of Illinois Press publication Morning Chores and Other Times Remembered (1977) lovingly captures his sensitivity to the beauty and pain of rural living. The rural arts show Hadley conceived nurtured the visual arts across the countryside that Hadley loves.

Hadley's rural roots were cultivated in sophisticated academic soil. He studied journalism and economics at Iowa State University and spent his spare time participating on the University's debating team. He received his B.S. degree in 1939 and his M.S. degree in 1941 from Iowa State.

Before coming to the University of Illinois in 1947 as head of the Office of Agricultural Communications, he worked as an economist-editor for the Ralston Purina Company of St. Louis, spent two years as a daytime farmer and nighttime publisher of a weekly newspaper, and served as an assistant extension editor at Iowa State University.

At the University of Illinois, Hadley headed a professional staff of 26 writers, editors, broadcasters, teachers and visual communication specialists.

Throughout his career Hadley has been committed to encouraging intelligent and worthwhile communication. By communicating his own vision of an amateur-juried art show to his colleagues Duke Regnier, Walter Johnson and Hal Bean, Hadley made it possible for artists all over Illinois to share publicly their private aesthetic visions.

The Town and Country Amateur Art Exhibit has grown from its exciting beginning. Today it is the most juried art show in the country. This year artists from all parts of Illinois have competed and won in county and regional shows before entering the state exhibit in Champaign-Urbana. Hadley encouraged this growth. He supported it consistently and imaginatively with the efforts of his professional staff of communicators.

Hadley, who is familiar to professional colleagues through books such as Partners With India: Building Agricultural Universities, Communication: Methods for All Media and Getting Information to Farm Families, as well as the many lectures he has given, forever familiar to us for the Town and Country Art Exhibit he initiated and worked to develop.

It is to Hadley Read with whose vision the art show began that we dedicate this 19th Town and Country State Art Exhibit a Catalog.
